What I Need to Know

Most Essential Learning Competencies.

- Discuss the nature, goals and perspectives in/of anthropology, sociology and political science

What I Know

Directions: Write TRUE if the statement is correct and FALSE if it is incorrect.

1. Anthropology focuses on individuals across places in connection with their community, history, how they cope, connect and adjust with the society, and how they socialize with other members of the society.
2. Sociology's focus varies from crime to religion, from a family to its state, from sections of social classes and race to the common principles of a certain culture, and from a social strength to radical difference in a whole society.
3. In sociology, the main concern is the society followed by culture.
4. In anthropology, culture comes as the main concern then followed by the society.
5. Political science concerns with the political system, practices, laws, and behavior of in a certain society, and its contributions and assistance to its individual.

Lesson 1 — Rationale for Studying Anthropology, Sociology, and Political Science

What's In

In this Module, you should demonstrate an understanding about human cultural variation, social differences, social change, and political identities. Significance of studying culture, society, and politics will be implied in the different activities in this module. So you are expected to learn the rationale for studying anthropology, political science, and sociology.

What's New

Anthropology - offers us with an idea of what it means to be human. Studying this discipline involves the biological aspects that makes a person such as genetics, physiological evolution, etc., as well as the social aspects like culture, political system, language used, family and religious belief.

Sociology - focuses on the study of a society and its relationship with its members. It studies the way an individual is being influenced and molded by the society he/she belongs to and the different units that make up this society such as the community, economic involvement, and political influence.

Political Science - is a discipline that studies the government systems, as well as its political programs and performance. It is mainly concerned on a premise of who and what will be gained and how to get access from it.

What is It

Importance of Research in Daily Life

Anthropology discusses the nature of culture which can be connected to a certain society. The study of sociology focuses mainly on the nature and relationship of a society to its people. Political Science is the study of political system in a certain area or location, and its relationship on its culture and society. These three concepts are under social sciences. It involves people and pure observations based on what is really happening. To understand the difference among these three, refer to the table below:

	Anthropology	Sociology	Political Science
Nature	It is mainly concern on human person, his attitude or behavior and the community that he is associated with. Its main concern is the type of culture an individual can be categorized to base on the community he belongs to. "Anthropology is the study of human kind everywhere, throughout time, seeks to produce useful generations about people and their behavior and to arrive at the fullest possible understanding of human diversity" (Havilland, W. A.1975). "Anthropology is the study of people and all the things they do, think, say and make" (Gwynne and Hicks, 1994). -sociology.com	Sociology is an independent science. It is grouped as a social science and not the physical science. Being in the social science, it concerns on the relationship of the human person to his society such as attitudes, behavior, and socialization. It is always associated with other disciplines such as economic, political science, anthropological science and historical perspective.It is bounded on the premise of what should be or should not be done. Its approach is neither moral nor immoral, but amoral. It is ethically neutral. -lisbdnet.com	It is a social science discipline that focuses on the theories of politics and the different activities involve in it.It also involves the different political activities being handed out by a certain government and how it behaves accordingly. It includes issues involving a state, claims of power, making decisions and rules and types of government decided by a political party or system. Political science is a study of the state in the past, present and future of political organization, processes and functions of political institutions and theories. -University of Political Science

Goal	• Understanding that culture is connected to the type of people a society has. Cultures are unique with each type of people, and understanding it requires the understanding of its people as well. • Appreciating that cultural forms – from rituals to class relations to one's self-understanding ¬– are socially or culturally constructed and enacted by symbolic process. • Understanding that politics is intrinsically cultural and culture intrinsically political. • Realizing that environment influences a certain part of an individual's social aspect. -Bates College, bates.edu	• Learning the underlying principles in socialization. • Learning the individual's behavior and practices on the society he belongs to. • Identifying the different societal concerns and finding means on how to come up with a productive solution. • To give an understanding of a certain society, its practices, and functions, and properly address its concern to an individual. • Giving the history of a known society. • Presenting different social groups that contributes to the society. • Describes the importance of unity and achievement of a society's goal. • Examining social connections that binds its members. • Developing different social theories. -steemit.com@allizz	• Understanding a certain political scenario, members of the government, concerns, and its needs. • Analyze relevant and its origin and current political status. • Analyze the concepts used in politics such as mass influence, psychological and philosophical aspect, communication, leadership styles among others. • To enable an individual to be a better one. • Political science learners must know their roles and responsibilities in a group and how they can maximize it to assist other individuals. It must protect individuals against indifferences, biases, pessimismand sarcasm. -Tony Purtell, 1983
Perspective	Focusses on the origin and the cultural structure	Focusses on the nature of society	Focusses on the structure and foundations of politics

Guide Questions:

1. What are the cultural variations discussed in the video?
2. What is the general concept of SOCIAL DIFFERENCES?
3. Create a graphic organizer which shows the differences of cultural variations.

Activity 2.

Directions: Show the significance of studying culture, society, and politics by drawing a poster of the current situation of our nation. Include the real-life situation which your family is facing right now. Draw your poster in a sheet of paper.

(Sample posters you can find in the web)

What I Have Learned

- Anthropology focuses on individuals across places in connection with their community, history, how they cope, connect and adjust with the society, and how they socialize with other members of the society.
- Sociology's focus varies from crime to religion, from a family to its state, from sections of social classes and race to the common principles of a certain culture, and from a social strength to radical difference in a whole society.
- In sociology, the main concern is the society followed by culture.

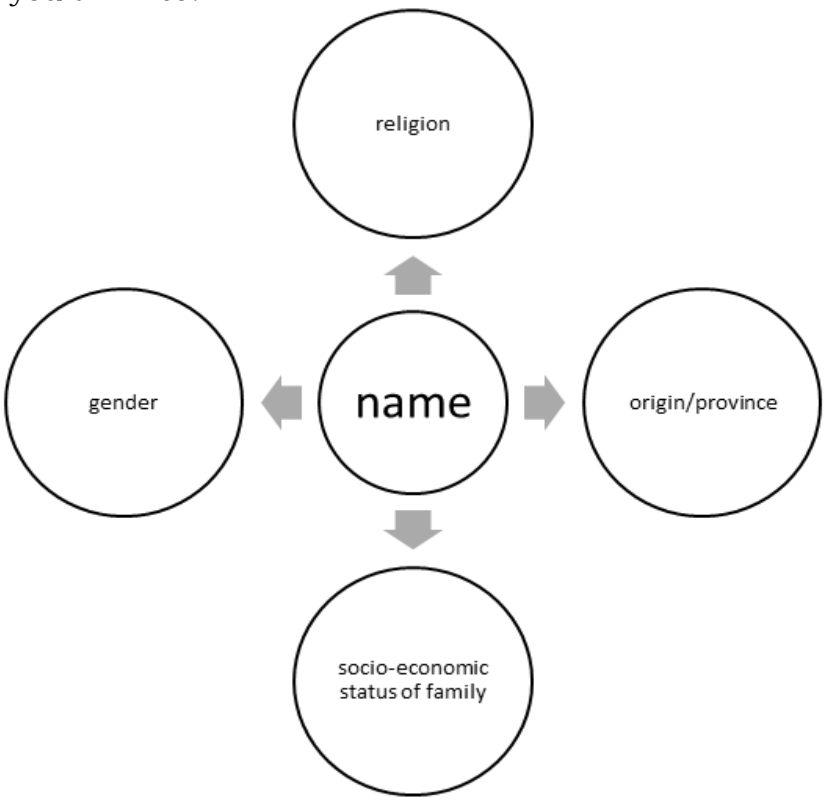
- In anthropology, on the other hand, culture comes as the main concern then followed by the society.
- Political science concerns with the political system, practices, laws, and behavior of in a certain society, and its contributions and assistance to its individual.

What I Can Do

Activity 1. Complete the information being asked on the diagram below.

Based on the diagram, answer the following questions:

1. What do you think are the similarities of every individual?
2. What do you think are the differences of every individual?
3. Do you think that these similarities and differences affect the functionality of a community? Why do you think so?



Activity 2.

Directions: Research two known countries in Asia and identify their cultural elements based on the categories given.

Culture	Country: _____	Country: _____
Type of Government
Holidays

Activity 3.

Instruction: Create a Video / Vlog about the appreciation of the value of anthropology, sociology, and political science as a social science. Include some actual examples in your video to emphasize the significance of this sciences in reality.

Assessment

Directions: Write O if the statement is true, and X if it is false.

1. Anthropology focuses on individuals across places in connection with their community, history, how they cope, connect and adjust with the society, connect and how they socialize with other members of the society.
2. In sociology, the main concern is the culture followed by culture.
3. In anthropology, on the other hand, culture comes as the main concern then followed by the society.
4. Political science concerns with the political system, practices, laws, and behavior of in a certain society, and its contributions and assistance to its individual.
5. Learning the individual's behavior and practices on the society he belongs to is one of the goals of political science.

Additional Activities

Directions: Watch this video documentary of Rick Howard about his observation in the Philippines during his tour in our country. Write your own observation about the culture, society, and politics in the Philippines that you had witness in this video. Use a separate sheet of paper for your observation.

What I Need to Know

Most Essential Learning Competencies.

- Analyze the concept, aspects and changes in/of culture and society

What I Know

Directions: Read each statement below carefully. Write T if the statement it TRUE. and F if you think the statement is FALSE.

1. Culture happens between interactions of individuals.
2. Culture refers to basic similarities only and not to systematic differences between humans.
3. According to Edward B. Taylor, culture is that complex whole which encompasses everything that a person learns and shares as a member of society.
4. Culture is social because it is the product of behavior.
5. The culture of every society is not unique to itself.

Lesson 2 — Concept, Aspects, and Changes in Culture and Society

What's In

In this Module, you should analyze the concept, aspects and changes in culture and society. Culture and society as anthropological and sociological concepts will be discussed and included in the various activities in this module. So you are expected to learn and appreciate the nature of culture and society from the perspectives of anthropology and sociology.

What's New

Culture – comes from the latin word "colere" with the meaning "to cultivate". According to Edward B. Tylor, culture is "that complex whole which encompasses beliefs, practices, values, attitudes, laws, norms, artifacts, symbols, knowledge, and everything that a person learns and shares as a member of society." Culture refers to basic relationships and variations between individuals. It also refers to social institutions such as the government, schools, churches, and the family.

Society – can be described as the socialization between individuals that shares the same culture. It can also pertain to individuals from a specific location or community that has the values with the same culture. A specific community is not just formed by a certain culture but also by different categories such as gender roles, values, laws, beliefs or traditions.

What is It

Culture – refers to the practices, values, attitudes, norms, laws and behavior of a group of people in a society. Culture makes a society complete and gives its value, form, uniqueness, and distinctiveness. When we talk about culture, we can categorize it into different tangible aspects which includes languages, infrastructure, different institutions and technology, and the intangible aspects such as the rules, norms, values, behaviors, and traditions.

Characteristics of Culture:

1. CULTURE IS SOCIAL BECAUSE IT IS THE PRODUCT OF BEHAVIOR – culture happens between interaction of individuals. As people interacts, culture continues to develop or change.
2. CULTURE VARIES FROM SOCIETY TO SOCIETY – culture originates from a certain society and is different from every type of society an individual belongs to.
3. CULTURE IS SHARED – this happens when an individual interacts and shares his ideas, customs, and wisdom as well.
4. CULTURE IS LEARNED – it is not acquired when an individual is born, but learned as he grows, communicates and socializes.
5. CULTURE IS TRANSMITTED AMONG MEMBERS OF SOCIETY – culture is being passed on to each member of the society through generations.
6. CULTURE IS CONTINUOUS AND CUMULATIVE – it is an endless and continuing process and is different for every type of society.
7. CULTURE IS GRATIFYING & IDEALISTIC – it gives right chances of satisfying goals and demands of an individual. It also allows an individual to make appropriate actions throughout his life.

Aspects of Culture:

Dynamic, Flexible, and Adaptive

Culture follows a certain period. It adapts and adjusts depending on the needs of a situation. When there are changes, the type of culture a society has will adjust and create a development so that people can fit to the present time. Let us say that children nowadays prefer using gadgets such as smart phones. Program developers in return will create new programs that will suite the interest of these children and to cope up with the demands of the present time.

Shared and Contested

Culture is being passed on through generations. As we have discussed as one of its characteristics, it is shared trough the members of a society. Members of a society learn this culture through communicating with each other. While culture is changing, people also get the chance to improve and follow the process.

But while culture is being shared within a society, there might be some objections within members in following or exercising this culture. This is sometimes due to individual differences of each member of the society. Because of this, conflict and arguments also arise.

Society – is a structured group of individuals living together and has a definite cultural patterns, religious organization, and political patterns, and with shared goals and desires. This is a community of individuals that were gathered through a common goal and interest.

A society is regarded by the following elements:

a. camaraderie among its members
b. collection of characters and culture
c. location and language used
d. number of its members and its survival
e. social, economic, and political institutions

The Relationship of Culture and Society

Culture and society are concepts related to each other. For culture to thrive and continue, it will be needing socialization. It enables people to communicate with each other and need to observe it continuously. When a society stops recognizing it, this culture might come to its end.

A culture is also important to a certain society because without its existence, a society might not function well and might collapse. A society without its own culture is comparable to a body without his soul, or the other way around. They require each other for them to continue and grow.

Activity 3.

Directions: Answer the questions below to help you identify some cultural influences in your life. To help you answer some of the questions, you are encouraged to discuss them with family members and friends.

1. What religion do you and your family practice?
2. What is your racial and/or ethnic background? (Examples include: Caucasian, Hispanic, African-American, Chinese, Italian-American, Iranian, Korean, half White and half Filipino)
3. In what part of the country do you live? (Examples include: east coast, west coast, south, Midwest)
4. In what type of community do you live? (Examples include: small town in the country, suburb, city, inner-city)
5. How safe do you feel in your neighborhood?
6. How much time do you spend with extended family (aunts, uncles, grandparents, etc.)?
7. What holidays do you and your family celebrate? Which holiday is most important, and why?
8. What types of foods do you and your family eat? What are special foods for your family?
9. What type of music do you and your family listen to?
10. What kind of art do you and your family have hanging in your home?

What I Have Learned

- Culture refers to the practices, values, attitudes, norms, laws and behavior of a group of people in a society.
- Culture makes a society complete and gives its value, form, uniqueness, and distinctiveness.
- Culture can be categorized into tangible aspects which includes languages, infrastructure, different institutions and technology, and the intangible aspects such as the rules, norms, values, behaviors, and traditions.
- There are different characteristics of culture such as it is social, varies from other culture, shared, learned, transmitted among members, continuous and cumulative, and gratifying and idealistic.
- A society is a structured group of individuals living together and has a definite cultural patterns, religious organization, and political patterns, and with shared goals and desires.
- A culture may not exist without the society or vice versa. It needs each other to continue and improve.

What I Can Do

Directions: Draw some symbols in school culture, then answer the following questions based on your drawing:

1. What are they and what meanings do they convey?
2. Do the teachers or administrators utilize these symbols?
3. Do you think it is necessary to have these symbols? Why did you say so?

Assessment

Directions: Read each statement below carefully. Write T if the statement is TRUE and F if the statement is FALSE.

1. Culture is shared.
2. Culture is sometimes called "unlearned ways of behavior".
3. Some cultural ways are learned by persons from persons, by elders, parents, teachers & others.
4. Culture is continuous and cumulative.
5. Culture is an endless and continuing process and is different for every type of society.
6. Society can refer to people from different places that shares the same culture.
7. Society is a community of individuals that were gathered through a common goal and interest.
8. Culture and society does not need each other to develop and prosper.
9. Culture is being passed on through generations.
10. Culture does not change and adapts to the current state of society.

Additional Activities

Direction: Watch this video documentary of Filipino Values-Understanding Culture. Enumerate the different cultures stated in the docu-film. Write your own observations on the cultures enumerated and if you still encounter those in the society you belong to. Use a separate sheet of paper for your observation.

What I Need to Know

Most Essential Learning Competencies.

- Explain the importance of cultural relativism in attaining cultural understanding.

What I Know

Directions: Choose the letter of the best answer.

1. What is the best definition of cultural relativism?
   a. A guideline that one society cannot impose its views and standards on another
   b. The highest ranking for a group's most cherished customs and values.
   c. A cultural group's desire to pass on its values to the next generation.
   d. An anthropologist's fanciest way of saying "culture"

2. Which of the following is FALSE regarding cultural relativism?
   a. When studying another culture, you must convert to its religious beliefs to understand its customs.
   b. Something that might be taboo in your own society might be perfectly acceptable in another society.
   c. It's difficult or even impossible to force your own culture's rituals onto another group.
   d. People tend to be more tolerant of another culture's customs when they learn the meaning behind them.

3. Which of these is an example of ethnocentrism?
   a. a girl picking on her little sister because she's got freckles
   b. a big brother picking on a little brother for being short
   c. a westernized woman looking down on a tribal woman for not wearing clothing
   d. a father being angry with his son for not doing his homework.

4. The attitude that a society's customs and ideas should be viewed within the context of that society's problems and opportunities is known as
   a. Ethnocentrism
   b. cultural relativity
   c. barbarism
   d. ethnicity
5. What is the main idea of cultural relativism?
   a. Moral beliefs vary from one culture to another.
   b. Morality itself (not just moral beliefs) varies from one culture to another.
   c. No culture has one particular morality that can be identified with it.
   d. Morality is the same all over the world because all cultures share the same basic values.

Lesson 3 Importance of Cultural Relativism

What's In

In this Module, you should be able to understand the concept of cultural relativism. Cultural relativism spare us from judging the moral behaviors of other cultures in cases where doing so seems to be unacceptable, but it also renders us inadequate to judge the moral status of other cultures in cases where doing so to be our moral obligation.

What's New

Cultural relativism is the form of moral relativism that holds that all ethical truth is relative to a specific kind of culture. According to cultural relativism, it is unacceptable to judge that a certain kind of behavior is right or wrong; rather, it can only ever be acceptable that a certain kind a behavior is right or wrong relative to a certain society.

What is It

Why Recognizing Cultural Relativism Matters

Using the perspective of cultural relativism enables us to understand that no culture is superior than another culture when compared to systems of morality, law, politics, etc. It is a concept that cultural norms and values derive their meaning within a certain cultural way of life. This is also based on the idea that there is no superior standard of good or evil, therefore every decision and judgment of what is right and wrong is individually decided in every society.

The concept of cultural relativism also means that ethical standard is subject to the perspective of each person within their specific culture. Overall, there is no standard of right or wrong ethical system. In a holistic understanding of the term cultural relativism, it tries to encourage the understanding of cultural practices that are strange to other cultures.

Unique Cultural Practices

1. Monkey Buffet Festival – A buffet for monkeys. An annual event in Thailand where over 3,000 kgs of fruits and vegetables are on display for the monkeys in Lopburi, Bangkok.
2. Don't show up on time in Venezuela - be on time is considered inappropriate in Venezuela and it is recommended to reach at least 15 minutes later than the set time. Guests who reach on time are looked down upon as being too eager and greedy.
3. It's insulting to your host to sprinkle salt on your food. If you have to season your plate, it means that you find the meal's taste is not good for your taste.
4. Famadihana - Dancing with the dead. A funeral tradition followed by the Malagasy tribe in Madagascar, people literally dance with dead bodies as part of the Famadihana custom. After bringing bodies of ancestors from their burial place, they re-wrap them in fresh cloth and dance around the tomb to live music.

What's More

Instructions: Observe some unique culture that you had observed in your community. Create a SLOGAN about it and express your positive point of view about it in your answer sheet.

What I Have Learned

Cultural relativism touches on to the idea that the values, knowledge, and behavior of people must be recognized within their own cultural context. This is one of the most fundamental basic concepts in sociology.

What I Can Do

Instructions: Promote a unique culture in your community by creating a short video clip. Show the positive qualities of this culture and how it affects the community.

Draw a poster about your experience in your community showing the positive effect of every unique culture that you observed while answering this module.

What I Need to Know

Most Essential Learning Competencies.

• Analyze the significance of cultural, social, political, and economic symbols and practices.

What I Know

Explain your opinion about this passage in your answer sheet.

> "In some cultures, particular colors are associated with gender, such as pink for girls and blue for boys. In some group of people, accents on letters tell people how words are pronounced have its cultural meanings. Gestures also have symbolic interpretation."

Lesson 4 — Significance of Cultural, Social, Political and Economic Symbols and Practices

What's In

A symbol has a meaning for the people who share the same culture in a particular community. It is created and maintained by the members of such culture. A symbol that carries meaning for people who shares the same cultural life does not require explanation. Language is an element and a reflection of culture. It is a system of symbols that allows members of a culture to communicate with one another. Words symbolize objects, ideas, and actions. But meanings differ vary in every specific culture.

What's New

Communication is based upon the use of mutually understood symbols that represents something which conveys meaning. Language and other systems of communication are deeply embedded in the culture that creates them. Communication can be verbal or nonverbal. Verbal communication can occur through both writing and speaking. Nonverbal communication also includes written communication, body language and gestures, and systems of communication such as cultural traditions and ceremonies. Both verbal and nonverbal communications depend on cultural context.

What is It

People create and interpret the meaning of all symbols through shared cultural understanding and practices. Communication can occur only if people know how to use and interpret a shared set of symbols. The ability to communicate is rooted in culture. A culture's shared set of symbols is produced and maintained through shared cultural beliefs, practices, traditions, and expectations.

Most symbols are visual. In some cultures, particular colors are associated with gender, such as pink for girls and blue for boys. In some group of people, accents on letters tell people how words are pronounced have its cultural meanings. Gestures also have symbolic interpretation. A symbol has meaning within a culture, because of a shared understanding of what the symbol signifies. Stories, traditions, history, and cultural norms contribute to the meaning of a symbol.

Symbols help people define and understand their culture because of the shared meanings of different symbols that are learned during the process of socialization and relations within the community, the process through which people learn the values, norms, beliefs, and expectations of each other. At the most basic level, symbols are important because they help people craft meaning in their interactions with one another.

Examples of Symbolism

1. Ching Chua gave his wife a red rose. In Chinese culture, the color red symbolizes property and happiness.
2. David stopped his car at the red signal. In some cultures, the color red is symbol of blood, passion, and danger.
3. Rebels raised a white flag to negotiate. During war, the color white symbolizes making peace with the enemy. It represents purity and life.
4. The Red Cross is working around the world. The symbol of the cross represents Christianity, and the red cross in particular represents aid in times of need.
5. The Muslim forces raised their flag with a crescent on it. The crescent moon represents Islam.
6. Green color is often associated with greed, jealousy, and monetary affairs.)

Lesson 7	State and Non-state Institution

What's In

In this Module, you should demonstrate an understanding about State and Non-state Institution. Significance of studying State and Non-state Institution will be implied in the various activities in this module. So you are expected to learn the rationale for studying anthropology, political science, and sociology.

What's New

Non-state Institutions - groups and organizations which operate outside the support of any state or government.

Banks and corporations both play their important functions in the economic system of society. Continued operation of businesses through the support of banks leads to greater chances of generating more income for the business corporations and increasing employment. More income means more savings to be deposited in a bank which will be used to lend to business owners. In this case, it can be seen that the bank plays a role in facilitating the cycle of expediting investments that will result to more income and savings.

What is It

Non-state Institutions

This are groups and organizations which operate outside the support of any state or government. They are referred to be 'stateless' since they are considered to be independent of any state, although, they usually collaborate with the government in implementing projects. Non-state institutions assume different functions and focus on a specific objective. In general, they develop certain services needed by members of the society for their progress.

A bank is a financial institution that provides financial services to different types of customers. Banks are in operation mainly for deposit and lending function. Customers can deposit their money to banks which grow through an interest rate. Banks also provide loans, at a higher interest rate, to customers who need money either for personal consumption or for investment and businesses.

Different Types of Banks

• A retail bank - is a type of bank that provides services for the general public as its customers. Personal bank account, like checking and savings account, are in a retail bank. Retail banks can be considered to be the most common and widespread of all the types of banks.

• A commercial bank- provides the same services as a retail bank. But it focuses on businesses and businessmen as its main customers. Commercial banks provide short term loans for businessmen to start their businesses and for investment purposes.

• An investment or an industrial bank- provides medium and long-term loans and deposits to business industries.

• Agricultural bank-provides short-term and long-term loans to facilitate agricultural activities.

The central bank is the main financial institution in a country since it supervises and regulates the monetary system in the country. It functions as a regulating institution to all other banks in a country and it issues all the bank notes (or money bills) and coins of the country in which it operates. The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas is the central bank of the Philippines. A central bank is the only banking institution established through a special law of the government.

A corporation is a business organization, created by a group of people known as shareholders/board of directors, which is legally bounded to act as a single person in carrying out certain goals and objectives of the business corporations. As a 'legal person', a corporation is mandated to enjoy the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of an individual. Using its own name, a corporation has the right to enter into contracts, to hire employees, and to loan and borrow money. It is also authorized to have its own assets.

According to the International Labor Organization (ILO), a cooperative is "an autonomous association of persons united voluntarily to meet their common economic, social, and cultural needs and aspirations, through a jointly owned and democratically controlled enterprise". Members of a cooperative usually joins together in order to achieve a specific objective, an objective which usually benefits the members of the organization itself.

Types of Cooperatives

- A credit cooperative provides financial services to its members, including securing savings and creating funds to be used for issuing loans.
- A consumer cooperative operates mainly to obtain and distribute products and commodities to its customers, both members and non-members.
- Producer cooperatives aids those in the sector of production, either agricultural or industrial. A subtype of a producer cooperative is agricultural cooperatives which help producers or farmers in marketing their crops as well as in purchasing supplies needed for further production.
- A service cooperative (or a worker cooperative) concentrates on helping workers in the service-oriented occupations (i.e. health care, transportation, labor) by creating employment opportunities and other benefits to its members.

- A multi-purpose cooperative undertakes two or more functions of different cooperatives. For example, multi-purpose cooperative could act as a consumer cooperative and establish a supermarket. At the same time, it could also provide financial services like a credit cooperative.

Trade Unions is part of the universal human rights of every individual is his right to organize and form associations that would protect his rights as a worker; the embodiment of this right is trade unions. A trade union or labor union is an organization with a membership composed of workers or employees from related fields, which aim to represent the interests and rights of its members, both in the workplace and in the society.

- A general union represents workers with a range of jobs and skills, from different industries and companies. An example of this type of union is a trade union of drivers, janitors and office workers.
- Industrial unions are composed of workers from one particular industry, across different levels of the hierarchy. A trade union of all employees who work in the mining industry (with different levels and positions) is an example of an industrial union.
- A craft union seeks to represent skilled workers doing the same work who may be employed in different industries. A craft union of carpenters is one example.
- A white-collar union is composed of professionals doing similar jobs across different industries. A trade union of teachers and professors is an example of a white-collar union.
